

Membership Guidelines

The Riddell Centre for Cancer Immunotherapy's mission is to develop innovative therapies for safe and effective treatment of high-fatality cancers in adults, children, adolescents, and young adults. To do this, we need to bring together researchers, health care providers, research personnel, and trainees in immune oncology.

We strongly encourage all Riddell Centre members to become members of the Arnie Charbonneau Cancer Institute. Learn more about how to do that here: <https://charbonneau.ucalgary.ca/our-members/members>

Members of the Centre come from many departments and disciplines. Potential members may be invited by the Centre or may self-nominate for membership. Members must show an active interest in and participation of research that supports the mission and research objectives of the Centre. Additional responsibilities include (as appropriate):

- Engagement in Centre events, where possible
- A willingness to serve on Centre working groups, grant review panels, committees and /or boards
- A willingness to share resources that may be relevant or of interest to the research community (e.g., research equipment, reagents, scholarly contributions, education, and training opportunities) in a timely manner
- Raising awareness about the Centre and fostering financial support, where possible
- Responsiveness to media inquiries and other opportunities to contribute their expertise and views with the public
- Acknowledging the Centre, as well as the Arnie Charbonneau Cancer Institute, in grant applications, publications, presentations, and interviews
- Maintaining and updating their member profile and contact details, which will be on the Centre's website

Investigators who are awarded funding from the Centre (including investigators whose trainees receive funding from these funds) will be expected to become a member. Continued funding and / or use of resources will be contingent upon members meeting the responsibilities of membership.

For further questions, or to become a member of the Riddell Centre, please contact our Business Operations Specialist, Lisa Willms (lwillms@ucalgary.ca).